Mr. Bliss does not propose to blow hot air into dwellings, but to cause it to circulate through pipes which shall heat rooms by radiation as is now done by steam-heating, over which system the new one will have manifest advantages-as, for instance, there will be no trouble caused by the water of condensation, which, besides the unpleasant noise it occasions in the pipes, she declined to hear, saying that his name is not unlikely to freeze and burst them, and at any rate entails a large outlay at the time of the installation in order to properly provide for its escape. Is is also said that the cost of fuel for heating the air will be much less than for obtaining the same heating power from steam. Not only is hot air to be provided for heating dwellings, but also for cooking and for industrial purposes; for the system looks to providing hot air under such a pressure that fans and bellows may be dispensed with and the consumption of fuel be materially diminished. This pressure will vary somewhat to the points at which it is to be delivered, but will average about fifteen pounds to the square inch, while the degree of heat will average about six hundred de-

Coming West.

[From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.] It must be a sad blow to the pride of Pittsburgh, but it is plain fact and common sense that Pittsburgh has more hands than she has work for, and the emigration movement which proposes to take 10,000 sturdy Welshmen from the mines and forges and send them west is an act of real philanthropy. It is the beginning of that change in the distribution of labor to which we have often referred as essential to the restoration of prosperity; and as it merely transfers a certain description of labor from a district in which there is a surplus to a district in which all labor has its value and its reward, the benefit of the change is unmarred by any corresponding evil.

At first sight it looks as if it would be a serious loss to Pittsburgh and the surrounding coal and mineral region, but the loss is more apparent than real. The real loss to a city is when its workmen stand idle, when poverty and distress seize on their families, and when trades and industries are carried on at a loss. This is a state of things which the Pittsburgh district has known for three years, and which will be partially corrected by the removal of her surplus labor. It will be a long time be-A. Those who remain will get steadier employment, and be that much better off.

Of course there are croakers and prophets of evil who go about saying that the public land is used up, that there is no fertile land left; and Major Powell is discredited with a statement that there is not enough cultiment he stated what was not true. A tall, elderly, refined-looking gentleman questions relative to the registering of a letter, and was very sharply, rudely, and unnecessarily snubbed by a young woman in attendance. He asked her if she thought that was a proper way to answer an inquiry in a public office. She said she thought that she had been quite civil enough for him. He asked her, with an .ominously-increasing mildness of manner, if she would favor him with her name. She emphatically declined to do so. He then said he thought he would tell her his name, which, however, was no concern of hers. He calmly replied that he thought it was, for his name was John Manners, and he was the Postmaster-General.

The Charges Against Collector Russell Not Sustained.

In the Russell investigation Special-Agent Webster, of the United States Treasury Department, yesterday received the depositions of Messrs. Fielding Jones and C. C. Fant, late deputies in the office of the collector Sampson P. Bailey, Esq., of Fauquier, and Rush Burgess, Esq., ex-collector. The main charges sought to be established by Messrs. Bailey and Fant were that, while chief deputy to Mr. Burgess, Mr. Russell had consented to and assisted Mr. Burgess in turning to his own use Government funds, and that Mr. Russell dismissed Fant bondsmen to appoint persons by them to be Mr. Bailey, who has all along acted a frank and manly part in the prosecution, deposed that of his own knowledge he could say nothing. Nearly all that he knew on the subject was told him by Messrs. C. W. that the latter took him (Bailey) to his house and detailed the transactions of the office, showing Russell at fault, and furnished witness with certain stubs and documents which were yesterday produced before Mr. Webster. Mr. Burgess yesterday admitted that while laboring under some excitement he had said things against Mr. Russell which he could not substantiate. His evidence exonerated Mr. Russell, and the latter, while expecting to find him a chief accuser, was gratifled to hear from him a statement which was practically a vindication. Mr. Fant insisted that he understood Mr.

Russell to say to him soon after Russell succeeded Collector White that he would have to make room for persons to be named by What he did say, as he states, was that he felt under obligations to those who had become surety for him to appoint or retain no non-residents of the district, and that he did not remove any but such non-residents, and this district.

Mr. Webster is a discreet and patient officer. What he will report to the Government of course is not known, but it is hardly possible, under all the circumstances, for him to do otherwise than state that the charges are not sustained. Mr. Bailey has dropped them, so far as he is concerned, and will write a letter explaining how he was misled.

Mr. Fant abandoned his part in the accusations except as to that one which refers to Mr. Russell's conversation with him in relation to appointments. As to that, he will, upon arriving at Washington, write a letter to the Department requesting to withdraw that charge.

The whole prosecution has, in other words, collapsed. Messrs. Fant and Bailey returned home last evening.

Mr. Webster will remain bere to-day and receive from Mr. Russell a full and complete narrative of the occurrences in question, so when the decision is made it may be with all the facts before the Department, and be final and conclusive. As the fight was begun against Mr. Rus-
